

Gina Hollomon

Gina Hollomon has lived in Anchorage, Alaska for 40 years, most as a practicing artist, sculpting large birds and animals in clay. She has created artwork for schools and public places in various parts of the state and is proud to have a dedicated wall in the Discovery Center of the Anchorage Museum. She's owned an art gallery and been a tireless advocate for artists and art organizations in various roles. When she attended high school in Tennessee in the 1970's, the entire art program had been cut due to budgetary decisions. Not having that opportunity left a life long impression as to the important outlet all art forms provide for young people during those difficult years of transition.

Gina has traveled all over Alaska and the world exploring other cultures, wildlife and people. She lives in Anchorage with 2 dogs, a cat, a cockatoo and a hedgehog.
